The Hand of Fellowship

Nevada in general and the southern country in particular has every reason to be grateful for the fact that the storm of Saturday was no worse. Goldfield is still on the map and its people are as optimistic as at any time in the history of the camp. The damage did not amount to enough to handicap the business of the town or interfere with the operation of the mines. The damage was localized and confined to losses of merchandise and destruction of a class of homes that are usually found on the outskirts of every city. A few nice houses were caught in the drift of the tornado and damaged but the material loss is confined chiefly to the transportation lines. The loss of life was greatly magnified through the difficulty of ascertaining conditions owing to the suspension of power and light service and when day broke yesterday a sigh of relief went up from those who had been entrusted with the duty of protecting the town and looking after the wants of men and women in distress.

The death toll diminished instead of increased as is usually the case where sudden calamity afflicts a dense community and while two lives were sacrificed there was no foundation for the reports of losses of children and whole families as feared during the height of the visitation.

Goldfield grit was equal to the occasion and before the ravages of the storm had ceased committees were at work and the situation was well in hand. Goldfield proudly declared it could look after the requirements of the people but the citizens of the southern camp were none the less thankful for the prompt assistance tendered by Tonopah.

Tonopah was not slow to act when informed of the reports from Goldfield by Mr. J. C. Martin, of the Bonanza. Without a moment's delay or hesitation a mass meeting was called at the Elks club and, acting on the suggestion of the Bonanza, steps were taken to meet the worst should it be found necessary to look after the interests of the stricken city. Mr. Martin suggested the expediency of organizing forthwith and then waiting for absolute and authentic news of the storm and its devastation so that not a moment would be wasted in acting upon the summons. Not a second was lost in preparation. Every business man volunteered his services and every man and firm owning a motor car placed the motor or autos at the command of the committee. Fortunately the help was not needed, but the sudden demand emphasized once more the imperative necessity for a business men's organization to establish an official channel for united action in any case where occasion demands co-operation. A chamber of commerce with a small fund would have taken the situation in hand at once and there would not have been any call for collecting funds. The money, when needed, would have been there subject to check and much valuable time would be saved.

That there was no crying need for relief does not detract from the promptness of Tonopah in tendering aid. The response was spontaneous. In less than an hour after the first news was received by the Bonanza a dozen machines with doctors, medical supplies and emergency stores were speeding through the driving rain in the direction of Goldfield and the arrival of these inquirers was awaited with an interest that words cannot describe. When at last the wires told the citizens of Tonopah that their generous offers were not required there was an outburst of thanks that could not have been greater if the homes of Tonopah citizens had been jeopardized.

The acuteness of the local situation was not fully appreciated until later Saturday night when telegrams began arriving from outside points asking about the safety of friends and relatives in Tonopah. Goldfield had heard that this city had suffered and the news was sent out as a rumor. This rumor was accepted as a fact and owing to the delay of getting wire connections the truth did not reach the outer world until late Saturday night.

Tonopah was all right. Goldfield was damaged but still in the ring, a little battered but good for a long life and a continued period of prosperity. The mines could not have been damaged and the bread winners had their losses mitigated by the assurance that they had not been deprived of the means of earning a living. The prospective pay check remained to fortify those who had suffered losses and hope buoyed them up to face the future.

Goldfield is receiving the felicitations of everybody on escaping a calamity and it is accompanied by the best wishes for immunity from any greater disaster. Goldfield has enjoyed remarkable immunity from serious loss. While Tonopah has suffered from fire and accident the gold camp has never been subjected to any disastrous experience and the citizens of this camp therefore are all the more ready to congratulate their neighbor on escaping without greater damage.
